December 10, 1948 The UN General Assembly adopts the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights was adopted by the UN General Assembly on December 10, 1948. Every year around this date, many events are held around the world to reaffirm the significance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Many events are held around the world around this date each year to recognize the significance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

The Writing Marathon will appeal to governments to address human rights abuses and will also send messages of support to victims of human rights violations. You may be thinking, "Will just writing a letter really make a difference?" But in about 40% of cases, it does. Your letter will light a light of hope across borders. Why don't you join us?
